I hated to do it to you, Mr. Grim.
And I hope that it won't make you sore;
But every little bit added to what you've got.
Makes just a little bit more.

—Lipe's Liners.

It was classy; it was the real article. That was the kind of an exhibition which the Lawmakers put up yesterday in their first game of the season with Lynchburg, and the score stands 11 to 2 in favor of Lipe's squad. The Lawmakers, indeed, thrashed and mauling the Shoemakers, giving them as severe a mauling as anybody would wish to see.

With the exception of the first and second innings the visitors put up a good game, but in these two rounds the Lawmakers made it a slugfest. Besides, the Shoemakers played stupidly, batted muffed, threw inaccurately, and piled up a small mountain of errors of both omission and commission, allowing nine men to press their heels upon that five-cornered piece of rubber called the home plate in these two innings.

In the third inning Heffron was put out twice before he had gotten started. Eleven men went to bat, six secured hits, seven scored, and three errors were made; and all this happened after West had fanned two men in order. But what helped most in the unequal verdict was the excellent work of the Lawmakers. The raw, winter-like breeze, which was cold enough to numb the arm of an Arctic pitcher, but the locals seemed as much at ease as Mother Carey's chickens in a storm. Heffron, Lipe and Riggs did some splendid fielding, and it was due to them that the Lynchburg score was not larger.

In the exception of the seventh, when the visitors found him for four singles, Archer fed shoots from the hill that kept the batters guessing. Cowan, Ison and Lipe were the hitters of the occasion. The local team worked as well as the first order, and the way the squeeze play was executed in the eighth was good to see. For Lynchburg Kirkpatrick handled the willow well, and Moss played a good game at short.

After the Shoemakers had been retired in the first, Heffron led off for Richmond, flying out to center. Lipe singled past third, going to second on Riley's muffed throw. Kanzer walked, and then to second on a single to Bowen. He then let it go through him, while Lipe pranced home second as Riggs went out at first. Sandherr directed a grounder to first, which the first baseman failed to touch, and Kanzer scored. Sandherr, however, was put out trying to steal.

Both sides were retired in quick time in the second, but in the third, again, Lynchburg had again the better of the locals. The locals started things. Archer struck out and Heffron did likewise, but Lipe worked West for his base on balls. Again Kanzer scored a boundary to Bowen, and again the latter let it pass him. Hooker backed up the second baseman, but he, like Lipe, missed the sailing sphere. When the ball was finally cornered and sent back to the diamond a prisoner, it was discovered that Lipe had taken the opportunity to tally again, while Kanzer held down second. A funny thing happened then: the next four men coming to bat hitting the first ball thrown over to them for clean singles.

Riggs's well to the left green checked a run for Kanzer, while the batter passed to second on the throw-in. Sandherr, who was short, advanced Riggs to third. Timman's headless liner over second base scored Riggs and put Sandherr on second. Ison's ricocheting ripper to that portion of the garden nearest Broad Street scored Sandherr and sent Timman to second.

After the quarter he performed their tailoring stunt, Cowan strode to the plate. He let the first ball go by, but when the second one came over he leaped forward, bringing the bat around from his shoulder, and pressing its surface against the ball. When the horse head stopped rolling against the colored grandstand in center field, the batter stood on second, while Timman and Ison walked toward the players' bench.

After that Archer made his second appearance at bat in this inning, and lined one out to center field, which scored Cowan. Heffron's second appearance, however, resulted in him flying out to first.

In the seventh the Shoemakers themselves did some scoring after two men were out. Hooker and Bailey put flies into the hands of Ison and Lipe, respectively, but Kirkpatrick sent a fierce slug to center, which Riggs, by burning up the turf, reduced to a single. Ison, however, he held Bowen on third. The latter scored when Cowan missed West's high fly in front of the pitcher's box.

In the eighth Ison led off with a swat, which was good for halfway around the circuit. Cowan singled to center, scoring Ison and going to first. He then walked. Archer went out at first while Cowan reached third. Heffron sacrificed, and the squeeze play was worked, scoring Cowan. Lipe was thrown out at first. The score:

Wise Talks by the Office Boy

Pa says: "A man never has real trouble until he has a son big enough to wear his clothes, ties, socks and shoes. What do you think? The old man told me the other day I was to brace up and wear better clothes. You see, I've held this job for quite a while now, and the boss has put a yeast cake under my pay envelope twice already; so, of course, I ought to do all I can to uphold the credit of the store. This establishment brings New York to your very doors by showing every new creation and fad in clothing, hats, neckwear, handkerchiefs, hosiery, etc., almost as soon as they come out. I guarantee that our price will be as cheap or cheaper than theirs. I guess there's no store south of New York that shows such a big line of young men's fixings."
